The Power of Descriptive Keywords

When it comes to effective search engine optimization (SEO) and accessibility, descriptive keyword integration is crucial. In the case of the "But That Detail Collected Stories Of Alan: Annotated Edition," the long descriptive keyword specifically tailored for the alt attribute is "annotated edition of Alan's collected stories." This keyword provides search engines and visually impaired individuals with a clear understanding of the image, enhancing the overall accessibility of the webpage.

It is important to note that while long descriptive keywords are essential for alt attributes, they should still be relevant and accurately reflect the image or content they describe. By implementing a relevant long descriptive keyword, search engines and users can have a better grasp of the webpage's content, leading to more organic traffic and greater accessibility.

An all-new collection of A J Alan's stories:

- New
- Fully edited
- Many stories only available in this edition
- A J Alan's original preface

A J Alan was the pseudonym of Leslie Harrison Lambert, a Foreign Office official, amateur magician, former Royal Navy officer and cryptographer in Hut 3 (the Enigma team) at Bletchley Park.

Why did he need a pseudonym, you'd like to know, and the answer to that is that he made occasional broadcasts on the wireless in the '20s and '30s, spinning tall tales that he wrote himself and pasted onto large squares of cardboard so as not to disturb the audience with the sound of rustling pages. Lambert — that is, Alan — always turned up at the BBC in full evening dress, and with his own candle and matches as contingency in the event of a studio light failing.

His stories were immensely popular with radio listeners of the time. They are shaggy dog tales for the most part, often but not always steering away at the last moment from anything so vulgar as mere plot resolution. Some have a delicate touch of the supernatural about them, in the way a chap might tell you about an actual spooky experience.

The stories are very effective at doing precisely what the storyteller intended, namely letting you pass an agreeable quarter of an hour in the company of an amusing raconteur who's spinning an elegant verbal picture of how he went gadding about on various outré and/or outrageous adventures. Charming and whimsical, A J Alan deserves to find a new following among today's readers and would surely be delighted to see his work launched in digital format, just as he pioneered the exciting new communication medium of his own era.

This book contains ten of A J Alan's best stories: "The 19 Club", "A Joy Ride", "The Dream", "Wottie", "My Adventure in Norfolk", "A Foggy Evening", "My Adventure at Chislehurst", "H2, etc", "The Diver" and "The Hair".
