The Rise of Bubblecars and Microcars

In the aftermath of World War II, Europe experienced a surge in demand for affordable transportation solutions. As nations rebuilt their infrastructure, authorities sought ways to promote mobility for their citizens. This led to the of bubblecars and microcars – tiny vehicles designed to meet the needs of post-war societies.

Manufacturers across the continent, such as BMW, Messerschmitt, and Isetta, started producing these innovative cars. Bubblecars and microcars were characterized by their small stature, egg-shaped bodies, and unique door arrangements, often featuring a single or bubble-like canopy.
