Modern lifestyles are quite fast paced and different compared to what they used to be a decade ago or even earlier. Children face many challenges in their daily life activities. Sometimes the environment at home and outside is so different that they feel the pressure and stress within which they are unable to understand and work upon. Effect of the same can be reflected in their behavior in the form of irritation, agitation, anger, and isolation. To top this, parents, instead of understanding the pressure these children are undergoing, put their own expectations though unconsciously on them. Thus, during these growing years when the young minds are forming impressions and opinions about various things, it is necessary that we need to understand them and then guide them accordingly.

Counseling helps to work upon their emotions, it deals with their confusion, and, most important, it helps children unburden themselves by dealing with issues which are of concern to them though they might be quite trivial to others. It is very important for parents to work and prevent these stressors and to form a long and lasting relationship with their children.
