The Heinous Acts of Elizabeth Bathory

While Jack the Ripper may be a well-known name, the disturbing crimes of Elizabeth Bathory, also known as the "Blood Countess," are equally chilling. Born in Hungary in 1560, Bathory is believed to have killed hundreds of young girls, with some accounts claiming she bathed in their blood to preserve her youth.

Bathory's family was influential and allowed her to evade justice for a long time. However, rumors of her sadistic acts eventually reached the ears of authorities. In 1611, Bathory was arrested and sentenced to life imprisonment, though her accomplices were executed.

The case of Elizabeth Bathory continues to intrigue and horrify people to this day. The brutality of her crimes, coupled with her aristocratic background, creates an eerie fascination with her story.

The Serial Killer Albert Fish

Albert Fish, also known as the "Gray Man" or the "Werewolf of Wysteria," operated in the early 1900s and is considered one of the most deranged serial killers in American history. Fish had a particularly twisted appetite for children and confessed to kidnapping, torturing, and murdering several young victims.

Fish targeted vulnerable children, often those from impoverished backgrounds, gaining their trust before subjecting them to unimaginable horrors. His crimes were discovered in 1934 when a letter he sent to one of his victim's parents was traced back to him. Fish was eventually arrested, convicted, and executed in 1936.

The case of Albert Fish shocked the nation and left a lasting impact on American society. His sadistic acts of violence against innocent children continue to haunt the annals of true crime history.

The Green River Killer

Gary Ridgway, also known as the Green River Killer, terrorized the state of Washington in the 1980s and 1990s. Ridgway targeted prostitutes and young runaways, luring them to secluded locations where he would murder them and dump their bodies in the Green River.

His reign of terror lasted for nearly two decades until 2001 when advancements in DNA technology led to his arrest. Ridgway confessed to murdering 49 women but is suspected of many more killings. Today, he is considered one of the most prolific serial killers in American history.

Captured in the 1930s before the words psychopath and pedophile were part of common vernacular, notorious serial killer Arnold Sodeman murdered four young girls with little thought of remorse. Without guilt, the evil serial killer strangled them to death with their own clothing and left their small bodies alone in the Australian brush, earning himself a chilling position in the annals of Australian crime.

The first victim in his child murder spree, 12-year-old Mena Griffiths, showed signs of having been sexually assaulted, although the man who would become known as The School-girl Strangler denied the assault, and blamed the killing of both Griffiths and the other girls on his inability to control himself after he'd been drinking.

The horrific story of this true-life murderer – a tale of mental illness, childhood abuse, brain damage and alcoholic blackouts – is true crime as its most terrible, and ranks among the worst child murders in world history.

After his arrest, Sodeman calmly confessed, saying that when intoxicated, he became overcome by thoughts of revenge, and like a real-life Jekyll and Hyde, transformed from doting husband and family man into a barbarian who strangled four little girls.

He chose children and teens, he said, because he could lure them away much easier, but the cold-blooded killer really didn't seem to recognize the abhorrence of taking a child's life.

Experts now say the handsome but strange Sodeman would likely have been unfit to stand trial for his crimes, given his family's extensive background of mental illness, but in the 1930s, the serial killer's biography was a tale that left Australia stunned.
