What a tremor! What a yearning! O the burning with the longing! His hand was shaking, so he clenched it. He looked into her eyes, trying to imagine her face from behind niqab. Even the moon has disappeared behind the clouds of the darkness. And the land planted with grass has narrowed in his eyes, despite the scattered trees, at this quiet, sad night. Each of these trees has witnessed ages, after ages, has been irrigated by longing whispers and mourning sighs. Every two sincere but betrayed by luck used to make a pilgrimage to these trees, but now no one will make a pilgrimage to them, as ISIS will uproot them from the roots; then sow trees in their place, watering with the blood of sincere lovers.
