

Newspaper Blackout Austin Kleon - Unleashing Creativity through Redactions

Newspaper Blackout, a unique artistic technique introduced by Austin Kleon, has redefined the way we perceive words and creativity. Combining poetry, visual art, and journalism, Kleon's innovative approach has captivated audiences worldwide. In this article, we will delve into the incredible world of Newspaper Blackout, exploring its origins, techniques, and the impact it has had on the artistic community.

The Birth of Newspaper Blackout

Austin Kleon, a poet and artist based in Texas, stumbled upon the idea of Newspaper Blackout by sheer chance. One day, as he was struggling to overcome writer's block, Kleon noticed a discarded newspaper lying on his desk. To clear his mind, he picked up a permanent marker and began crossing out words that didn't resonate with him.

What emerged was a mesmerizing piece of poetry, composed solely of the remaining words on the page. As he continued this process, Kleon realized he had tapped into an untapped realm of creativity, one that would eventually become the foundation of Newspaper Blackout.

The Art of Redactions

At the heart of Newspaper Blackout lies the art of redactions. By selectively blacking out printed words on newspaper pages, Kleon creates visually stunning poetic compositions. Each blackout becomes a new work of art, breathing life into the discarded words of others.

While the technique may seem simplistic, it requires an acute sense of perception and creativity. Kleon searches for hidden meanings, double entendres, and thought-provoking phrases within the existing text. Through careful selection, he constructs cohesive and powerful poems.
