Author Richard F. Wright has uncovered the political conspiracy at the highest levels of state government that pressured State Representative John Fresolo to resign his seat amid a cloud of sexual innuendo and alleged ethics violations. For the first time since resigning in 2013, the truth is revealed how a naïve statehouse staffer, seeking a promotion, was manipulated into filing 13 unsubstantiated charges against the Representative in a kangaroo-court setting where the accused was not permitted to cross-examine state witnesses. Wright's two-year investigation, which included hundreds of hours of face to face interviews with those who were there, shows that the evidence used in the ethics committee hearings was false, distorted, and unreliable. Witnesses were found to be lying under oath. At the point where the state's case was collapsing, House Leadership conspired to blindside the Representative with materials, unrelated to the original allegations, not taken under oath or during the hearings, to blackmail him into resigning.

Wright has spent the past 40 years as a paid advisor to candidates running for local and state office including city council, mayor, sheriff, county commissioner, register of probate, state representative, state senator, and governor. He is currently President of NEB Publishing, specializing in assisting independent authors with book publishing.
