Have you ever wondered why MBA is such a sought after program? What makes an MBA different from other degrees? Why do people empty their pockets to wear the coveted MBA tag? What makes an MBA so special?

The answer is simple. The MBA program produces business leaders and these business leaders rule the markets. Markets are the most important entities in an economy. Without the markets the economies would collapse like a house of cards. An MBA teaches you to run these markets and therefore it becomes a highly sought after degree.

However, the markets are changing. New business dimensions are evolving every day. As a result, the expectations from the MBA graduates have also changed. The corporations are no longer seeking ordinary managers. They are seeking leaders, innovators and problem solvers. To accommodate the changing requirements, MBA programs are being continuously and rigorously restructured. The body of knowledge is bigger than ever before and you need to learn a ton within a limited period of time. If you miss one step, you will fall a hundred steps behind. You cannot afford to let your MBA slip out of your hands. You need to step up your game. You need to TAKE CONTROL OF YOUR MBA.
