The State Theatre

Opened in 1935, The State Theatre has witnessed countless movie premieres and has remained a cherished gathering place for Austinites. Its Art Deco styling, dazzling marquee, and towering columns make it a beloved icon on Congress Avenue. The theater has been carefully preserved over the years and still hosts a diverse range of performances, from classic films to live stage shows.

The Austin Film Society Cinema

Moving into the modern era, The Austin Film Society Cinema, established in 1975, has become a cornerstone of the city's vibrant film community. Located in the Mueller neighborhood, this contemporary movie house screens a diverse selection of independent, international, and overlooked films. It provides a platform for emerging filmmakers, enriching the cultural landscape of Austin.

The Alamo Drafthouse Cinema

No discussion of Austin's movie houses would be complete without mentioning The Alamo Drafthouse Cinema. Known for its innovative approach, this theater pioneered the concept of serving food and drinks during screenings, offering an unforgettable experience for movie enthusiasts. With its strict no-talking policy and eclectic programming, The Alamo Drafthouse has become a beloved institution in the city and beyond.

The Violet Crown Cinema

Located in the heart of downtown Austin, The Violet Crown Cinema combines the charm of a classic movie house with the convenience of a modern multiplex. Its eclectic lineup of independent films, combined with a full-service bar and café, has made it a favorite hangout spot for film aficionados. The cinema's intimate atmosphere and luxurious seating ensure that every moviegoer is treated like a VIP.

Austin's historic movie houses are not merely buildings; they are living artifacts that transport us to different decades, invoking a sense of nostalgia and enchantment. These theaters have preserved the magic of cinematic experiences, providing a communal space for movie lovers to come together, be entertained, and celebrate the art of film. From the grandeur of The Paramount Theatre to the modern innovation of The Alamo Drafthouse, each venue has its unique charm and historical significance.

If you are a cinephile or a history enthusiast, exploring the rich heritage of Austin's movie houses is an experience not to be missed. So grab your popcorn, immerse yourself in the captivating images, and uncover the stories behind these architectural wonders that have defined entertainment in the Texan capital for generations!

Motion pictures came to Austin on October 10, 1896, debuting at the Hancock Opera House. Since then, movies have continued to enchant, entertain, and inform the citizens of the capital of Texas. And, the places--the movie houses and theaters--where people saw motion pictures played just as important a role in the moviegoing experience as the movies themselves. As the city's population grew and motion picture technology changed, so too did Austin's movie houses, from the first kinetoscope parlor on Congress Avenue to the city's first four-plex, the Aquarius 4, in southeast Austin. While most of these places are long gone, some withstood the test of time and are still showing movies or have been repurposed for other uses. Through the rich archival collections of the Austin History Center, Historic Movie Houses of Austin explores the stories of these important historic spaces and of the lives of those who were connected with them.
