Tragedy upon tragedy craters a family of nine, leaving the youngest boy on the periphery not expecting to survive.

Common culture tells you that enduring hardships provides a reward. The Bird's Road is not one of those stories.

How do you cope with watching everyone around you die? What happens when you are unprepared for living? Where do you go when the god they've promised is not the one you find?

In this memoir, Sharek Gadd reveals an emotional toil few have the courage or strength to explore and share. Gadd examines his family roots to expose the source of deepest sadness while showing the beauty that reveals itself in the darkest of times. The Bird's Road is an Indiana heartland narrative entrenched in the independent immigrant American spirit that searches for a deeper meaning in our existence.
