Author Teresa Peters explores the mysterious and the familiar in a short story that will have you questioning what is, what isn't, and what has ever been.

Excerpt:

She imagined herself on the ocean, waiting to catch the perfect wave, the big one. She let her body be gently rocked, lifted and caressed as the smaller waves passed by her, through her. And all the while she could feel the force building. Deep within her, beneath the calm she'd created, her heart began to beat faster and harder. She knew that if she let it get out of control, its force would sever this fragile opening and it would be over. She would be safe back in her own body in the mundane world with no connection to the power she sought.

“Excuse me, miss?”

The interruption broke her trance and her legs, suddenly unaccustomed to the weight of her consciousness, buckled. The young man moved closer and it was only the heat of his body that seemed to hold her up.
