Noble Drilling, Inc., (“Noble”) conducts offshore oil drilling from mobile offshore drilling units (“MODUs”) on the Outer Continental Shelf. Until mid-1997, one such unit, the Paul Romano, was in active service as a U.S. flagged, submersible vessel holding a requisite certificate of inspection, issued by the Coast Guard under the statutory authority of 46 U.S.C. § 3306 and 46 C.F.R. § 2.01-5. Having such a certificate signifies that, as a condition of operating, the MODU must comply with a comprehensive body of Federal law and regulations administered by the Coast Guard (14 U.S.C. § 2) and designed to secure the safety of individuals and property on board vessels. See generally 46 U.S.C. § 3301 et seq. This regulatory scheme limits the reach of OSHA’s jurisdiction under the preemption provision of section 4(b)(1) of the OSH Act, 29 U.S.C. § 653(b)(1), which is intended to avoid the problems associated with overlapping regulation.<sup>1</sup>
