Prompt: Analyze the ways in which controversy over the extension of slavery into western territories contributed to the coming of the Civil War. Confine your answer to the period 1845-1861.

Throughout America's history, there has been a constant debate on the issue of slavery. This issue was largely controversial which is seen because of the ultimate—the Civil War. Leading up to the Civil War, debates on the issue of slavery in the western territories, surrounding the Mexican Cession, Compromise of 1850, and the Freeport Doctrine, have fueled the ever-growing conflict between the north and the south, eventually leading to the start of the civil war.

One of the key components in conflict in the union was the Mexican Cession. Largely, the debates circled around one question: does the land gained from Mexico become free or slave? The Wilmot Proviso was the first to face this question head on. The amendment proposed the issue of having slavery in the territories and stated that the land from Mexico should be free. Though this amendment never became law, it did bring to light the issue of deciding whether the new territory should be free of slaver. It is obvious that the idea of making all Mexican cession free angered the south. This amendment was one of the leading sparks in the political controversy on the issue of slavery. Moreover, we see this issue become a reality when California is won from Mexico. One of Polk's four point system was to gain California from Mexico. Once this happened, a greater issue surfaced: would California be admitted as a free or slave state? Before California became American territory, the United States was split even with 15 states free and 15 states slave. The South's worry was that if California became free, it would disrupt the sectional balance in the Senate. This gave the South a cause for concern and led to the greater struggle within the union and what they felt was best.

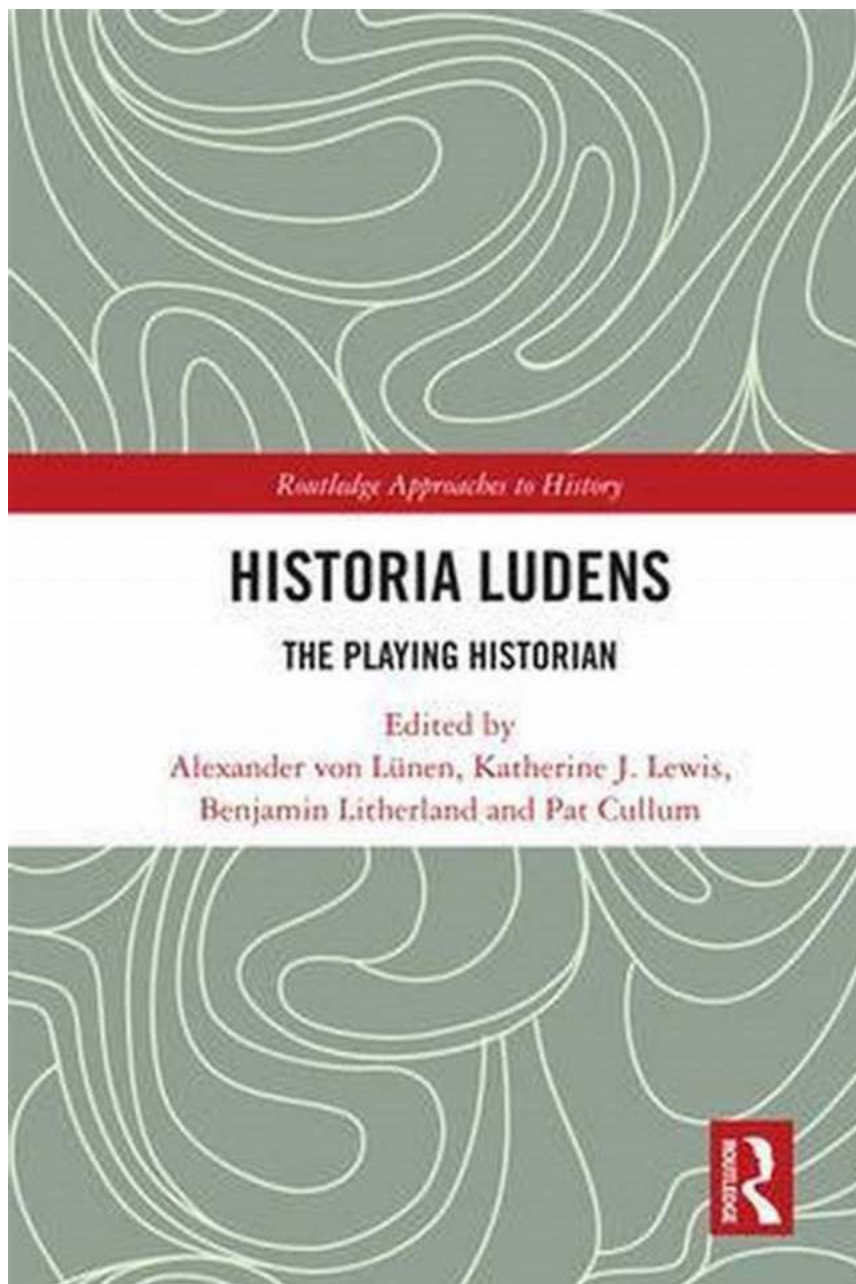

The Compromise of 1850 was signed by Fillmore once he took office. The compromise contained five actions: California would be admitted as a free state, the slave trade in D.C. would be abolished, popular sovereignty in the Mexican Cession, stricter fugitive slave law, and Texas would be granted $10 million for giving up their disputed land. From the compromise, the north and south were angered because of some of the actions that took place. Namely, the north was upset over the fugitive slave law. The fugitive slave law, more specifically, became stricter, creating a fine for anyone who helped slaves escape to the north, and supported those who wanted to capture runaways. This strengthened the anti-slavery cause in the north. The south was angered over the admission of California as a free state. As stated previously, it would disrupt the sectional balance in Senate. Overall, the compromise made the tensions between the north
