I have a hall tree made by my brother in-law built for his sister. He had a mirror for a back panel and didn't allow for shrinkage to the wood and the mirror cracked. It was made entirely of old pallets and rough cut to add character. This plan is more traditional in its design. On the back panel is an upper board wide enough to mount coat hooks. The lower section has a lid where the boards alongside are cut to support the lid. With a little re-designing, doors can be added above by adding face boards and doors.
