The Birth of the Henryton Project

Back in the early 1920s, the Henryton Sanitarium was established in Marriottsville, Maryland. Initially serving as a tuberculosis hospital, it later evolved into a psychiatric facility. The serene surroundings and grand architecture made it an ideal place for providing therapeutic treatments and mental health care.

Deserted Halls and Forgotten Memories

Unfortunately, financial constraints and changes in medical practices led to the eventual closure of Henryton in 1985. Left abandoned, the once vibrant halls began to decay, becoming a playground for vandals, trespassers, and urban explorers looking to unravel the mysteries that concealed within.
