CANCER that one word changed our lives forever.

My husband has cancer.

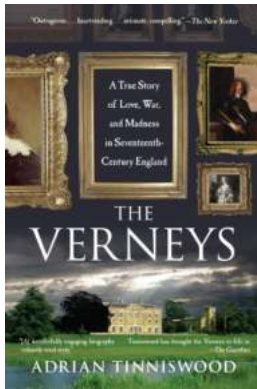

We told ourselves we could get through this.

Day after day I watched my husband slowly give into this nasty illness. My role was to be positive, to offer encouragement when I knew in my heart his time was running out. This is my story, raw and real.

On the day he died, I was the one with him holding his hand and telling him I loved him.

I had no peace. Instead, I had people trying to give me advice about what my husband would like, and how I should deal with everything that was happening to both of us.

I wrote this book in an attempt to try and help people who are already going through this journey or who are about to start. I hope my advice helps. As hard as it is at this time, you can get through this. Just listen to your heart and stay strong. All of those people who think they know, they have not yet walked in our shoes nor taken our journey.
