In order to comprehend the extent of Trafficante Jr.'s influence, one must delve into his early years. Born on November 15, 1914, in Tampa, Florida, Trafficante Jr. was the son of Santo Trafficante Sr., a prominent Mafia boss. Growing up in a family deeply embedded in the criminal underworld, his path seemed predestined.

As a young man, Trafficante Jr. made his foray into bootlegging, capitalizing on the black market demand for alcohol during the Prohibition era. This illicit trade provided him with substantial wealth and allowed him to establish connections with other influential mobsters. By the time Prohibition ended, Trafficante Jr. had already firmly established himself as a rising star within the criminal hierarchy.

In the 1950s and 1960s, Trafficante Jr.'s empire expanded further, particularly in Havana, Cuba. Operating casinos, hotels, and brothels, he amassed a vast fortune and became intertwined with the corrupt Batista regime. However, his reign in Havana came to an abrupt halt when Fidel Castro's revolution took over Cuba, leading Trafficante Jr. to lose everything and retreat to his stronghold in Tampa.
