When you think of American daytime television, does The View come to mind? For 25 years the talk show has had a host of hosts and with that brings a lot of laughter and well...drama. The show was created in the 1990s by Barbara Walters who also dualled as one of the talk show hosts. The negatives on the show sometimes outshined the happy moments. Some of the most entertaining segments for the audience were some of the most grueling incidents for the hosts and some they'd never forget. Have you come across the latest Whoopi Goldberg suspension online, but absolutely need the truth about her Holocaust comments? Then this is the perfect read.

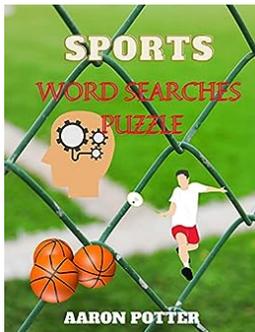

Scandalous moments possibly are what helps keep the daytime talk show in the public eye. From dealing with Rosie Perez's boisterous and unique laughter to more serious issues like Joy Behar dressing up for Halloween in a not-so-spirited "costume." The issues pressed can be sensitive, but it's always the approach the hosts give that weathers them ending up on the tabloids time and time again. However, guest appearances on The View have had their share of truly awkward conversations. Do you ever wonder what exactly went down when Omarosa defended former President Donald J. Trump? The scandalous encounters never cease to disappoint.

The perfect getaway without turning on the TV, but also diving deep into some of daytime TV's top problematic times. Can multi-generational women actually get along and discuss the biggest topics in the world? Short answer is that sometimes they do and other times they don't. Get the inside scoop of what went down after co-host Whoopi Goldberg exited the stage while live and also kicked a guest off of set while on-air. Read about the brawls on and off stage.
