

What It Feels Like To Ride Motorcycles

Riding a motorcycle is not just a form of transportation; it is an exhilarating experience unlike any other. The thrill of the open road, the freedom to navigate through traffic with ease, and the feeling of the wind rushing against your body create a unique sensation that cannot be replicated by any other means.

The moment you hop on a motorcycle, you become one with the machine. It's a symbiotic relationship where your body and mind work together to conquer the road ahead. The roar of the engine becomes your heartbeat, and the vibrations from the bike course through your veins, electrifying every sense in your body.

As you accelerate, the rush of adrenaline takes over, and time seems to slow down. Every twist of the throttle propels you forward, pushing the limitations of speed and control. The sensation of the bike leaning into a curve as you maneuver through the twists and turns of the road is indescribable. It's a dance of precision, balance, and sheer concentration.

Motorcycles provide a sense of freedom that is difficult to find elsewhere. With every ride, you are able to escape the confines of everyday life and experience the world in a completely different way. The open road becomes a canvas waiting to be explored, offering a glimpse into hidden landscapes and unseen destinations.

The connection between a rider and their motorcycle is deeply personal. The trust that is placed in the machine is unwavering. You learn to sense its every movement, responding intuitively to its cues. The harmonious synergy that develops is the result of countless hours spent together, building a bond that transcends ordinary relationships.

But riding a motorcycle is not without its risks. The vulnerability of being exposed to the elements heightens the awareness of your surroundings. The road demands your full attention, and the smallest lapse in focus can have serious consequences. Yet, it is this very vulnerability that makes the experience so raw and authentic. Every ride is a test of your skills, a constant challenge to remain present and in control.

There is a certain camaraderie among motorcycle riders. It's a shared passion that brings people from all walks of life together. Whether it's the friendly nod exchanged as you pass each other on the road or the enthusiastic conversations about bikes and adventures, the motorcycle community is a close-knit group that fosters a sense of belonging and kinship.

In , riding a motorcycle is more than just a means of transportation; it's a deeply immersive experience that engages all your senses. The freedom, adrenaline, and connection to the machine create a unique blend of emotions that cannot be replicated elsewhere. So, if you ever get the chance, hop on a motorcycle and discover for yourself what it truly feels like to ride.

Penned by one of the most prominent motorcycle journalists of the 21st century, Head Check invites readers to take in the color and detail of a rider's life vividly realized, richly observed, and transcendently described. During his tenure at Motorcyclist magazine, Jack Lewis has touched readers around the world not only through his incandescent prose riffs and self-effacing humor, but also through a consistent and deeply felt humanity.

This collection of magazine features and columns alongside personally published pieces and new material may be populated by motorcycles, but it centers around the varied experiences of riders (and their tolerant keepers) in a world where risk is a bet you make with yourself for purposes that must always surpass mere recreation. Head Check is -- beneath the sarcastic wit, wide-eyed fear, profound humility, and occasional descents into scatology -- a collection of love stories. Recommended for riders, readers, passengers, and humans.
