The Martyr Complex is a common problem in our culture. It is the most common in Mothers. To be raised by a constantly complaining mother has profound effects on your character. The most insidious is poor self-esteem; the most dangerous is suicidal behavior. The more you know about these consequences, the more you are able to heal from them; the less chance you have of becoming a martyr yourself.

Alice Wainwright has combined a lifetime of experience with a Martyr Mother with years of research into the character problems experienced by their children. She offers insight and direction for finding your way out of the maze that your life has become.
